Orlando – Buildings Construction

Orlando, Florida (September 2, 2014) – PCL Construction is pleased to announce that the Streamsong® Resort project has been awarded a 2014 Best Project award by Engineering News Record (ENR) in the Residential/Hospitality category.

“PCL is simply the very best at what they do. Working with owners as a team with no one member more important than the other, all equally committed to providing a high-quality product in a safe manner, was fantastic,” said Drew Locher, Director of Construction for Mosaic Fertilizer, LLC.

Streamsong® Resort is a three-story golf clubhouse and a six-story, 305,000-square-foot lodge. Together they feature a luxury resort with 228 guest rooms, golf course, and conference center on approximately 16,000 acres of formerly mined phosphate land in Polk County, Florida. PCL, Alfonso Architects, and The Mosaic Company, the world’s leading producer of phosphate-based crop nutrients and one of Florida’s largest landowners, forged a strong partnership that helped execute Mosaic’s vision by creating a destination celebrating the region’s ecology and heritage.

“We had a very talented team, between PCL, the owner, architect, and subcontractors, so for me the most rewarding part of the project was watching all of these talented people do great things,” said Jeremy Voss, project manager for PCL in Orlando. “I attribute the success of the project to the teamwork and dedication of everyone involved.”

An independent jury consisting of industry leaders in design and construction from the Southeast region judged the projects based on five criteria: overcoming challenges and teamwork, safety, innovation and contribution to the industry/community, construction quality and craftsmanship, and functionality of design and aesthetic quality.

ENR Southeast will recognize PCL at its annual award luncheon on November 11 at the Renaissance Orlando at Sea World.
